

I stand with the MAHA movement.

Friends,

The Make America Healthy Again movement exists because parents, farmers, and families decided they were done being lied to about what goes into our food, our water, and our bodies. I respect that. And I want you to know where I stand.

I am with MAHA. Celeste Maloy is not.

Here is the record:

The original draft of the recently-passed farm bill included a provision giving pesticide manufacturers immunity from lawsuits over the health harms their products cause. That protection extended to foreign manufacturers, including companies from China and Germany. It would have stripped Americans of their right to hold these corporations accountable in court.

When Rep. Anna Paulina Luna and Eli Crane brought an amendment to remove that legal immunity from the bill, the House voted 280 to 142 in favor of removal. The vote was a bipartisan rebuke of corporate protection at the expense of American families. I would have voted with Reps Luna and Crane. No question.

But Celeste Maloy voted against the amendment. Roughly a month before this vote, she received a campaign contribution of $5,000 from a PAC funded by pesticide manufacturers.

Maloy's vote is not a surprise to anyone who has been paying attention. The pattern is consistent: campaign money flows in from the industries seeking protection, and votes follow. That is how pesticide immunity ends up in a farm bill. That is how data center projects approved in five months without an environmental review got her support during last week's debate. That is how a representative stops working for the people she was elected to serve and starts working for the people writing the checks.

The long train of abuses, from closing our businesses and forcing deadly vaccinations on us, to robbing us through corrupt monetary policy, to enriching the elite while destroying everyone and everything else, to spraying our skies with poison, stripping our food of nutrition, deliberately degrading our forests, our rivers, and our lakes: these things should be condemned in Congress.

Yet we have, in Celeste Maloy, a representative who is cashing campaign checks when she should be defending the people.

The MAHA movement is the perfect time to break with conspiring corporations, to demand transparency, to stand up for people and ask: who benefits?

When our elected representatives fail to do these things, it is time to elect new representatives.

That is the choice before you on June 23.

I am asking for your vote and your help.

Sincerely,

Phil
